Huey freeman voice actor

The Boondocks originally had a sub underground, though, until the end of the series it had a mainstream audience. An audience that comes to enjoy the comedy of your face that revolved around real-life issues in African American society. It was never casually controversial but instead, he was disappointed when he wasn't. It was a series that spoke the truth powerfully and was heartbreaking at social issues that other mainstream shows didn't even dream of touching. With news of the reboot, fans of the show are grateful to finally be free, after spending years in television limbo. Until its return, let's discuss the 10 things you probably missed in principle.

10 Boondocks: Season 3 of the last series of Boondocks was a surprise hit for the adult swimming network cartoon. Few expected it to last its first season, but by the time it reached Season 3, the creators thought the show was living since borrowed. The final episode of It's Goin' Down season 3 was supposed to be the finale of the series and did everything in the episode to go out with a bang and row 24 Fox, complete with a government takeover of the neighborhood, as Jack's character believes the final confrontation with Hoy. Soon afterwards, however, Cartoon Network Bright Green Season 4.

9 Boondocks: R. Kelly's prediction while the Simpsons gained a reputation by predicting uncanny events in the future, it doesn't stand alone with the ghastly, however, correct prediction. Three years before R.Kelly's actual trial in 2008, Bundox Parved said what would happen if he was tried for his sexual misconduct with minors. In the series, even when R. Kelly encounters inescapable evidence suggesting he was guilty of a crime, the jury finds him innocent, for no other reason than that of a celebrity. Three years after the episode aired, a real-life jury did the same.

8 Boondocks: Uncle Ruckus's song theme Uncle Ruckus, a self-depicable, racial epitome throwing neighbor from the Freeman family is by far the most controversial figure in the series, as he consistently denies black culture and those who celebrate it. So it's no surprise that the show's creators are asking him to have the right music to go along with his nasty and unpopular stance. When deciding on her theme song, the creators chose a variation of The Jaba Hoet theme song from Star Wars. Turns out he couldn't have had a more suitable entry song

7 Boondocks: Celebrities Who Auditioned to Vocal Characters during his four-year run Boondock had a significant number of popular figures to add their voices to the show as guest characters as well, as regular shows. Many of these voices, fans might have been completely missing. Characters such as Bosta Rhyme, Kath Williams and Samuel L. Jackson all made audio appearances in the series. As interesting as sound casting was, it should be noted that many other celebrities were not selected for parts or just had their own voice Discontinue completely because of the time inhibition. hes looking at you here .

6 Boondocks: Silent-based characters from Boondocks politicians are never far from spouting their opinion on social and political issues of the day. Some of these comments may have been expressed as controversial, while some are just hard facts that need to be told by someone. The characters Ed Wuncler III and Gin Rummy were actually based on real-life political figures George W. Bush and Donald Rumsfeld. The title Of Winkler is W, the nickname George W. Bush, while ram's last name resembles rumsfeld's name. Both were intended for fans of the Easter egg show.

5 Boondocks: The meaning of Boondocks while suggesting boondocks are not shy about stating its agenda. The title of the show has a meaning that few fans have probably noticed. The word bundocks originates from the Tagalog word bundock, which means mountain when translated into English. The origins of the word originate when it comes to American culture, all the way to the Philippine-American war, where the word was returned home, by those who serve in the course of the fight. Like many words before that, it became a slang word describing a rural or suburban area.

4 Boondocks: Children voice female actors fans of the series know the Dubois family well. Cowardly lawyer Tom Dubois, however, sympathetic, who was the butt of many of Robert Freeman's pranks, was married to Sarah, the repressed white housewife who had a spell for rappers. Their daughter, Yazmin, was a naïve but innocent girl who challenged Huy Freeman's longstanding beliefs about the true nature of the people and strikes a balance of her normally conspiratoric anti-mentality. Yazmin's voice comes from Gaby Soleil and later Kiara Polas, both of whom were 10 years old when they got the voice of young daughter Dubois.

3 Boondocks: Uncle Ruckus spin-off Uncle Ruckus, a racially bigoted neighbor to Freeman, who in his denial about his racial ethnicity is surprisingly fan favorite enough on the show. So much so that the creators were looking to do a live-action movie or possibly even spin-off the Bundocks with him as the main character. The show's creator, Aaron McGauder, started a kickstarter project, hoping to raise enough funds to give the project credit. While he did well more than half the funds asked to raise, the project still came up short and planning was canned in both movies and spin-offs.

2 Boondocks: Riley and Huey by the same voice actor the Freeman brothers couldn't be more different. So it's a bit surprising that both Hoy and Riley share a sound actor. Regina King was brought to Riley's voice but at the time of her employment, a voice was not decided for Hoy. King agreed to fill the role while another voice actor could be hired, but the show's creators enjoyed his work a lot, they give him the chance to play both brothers. At first, King refused to play any role in Huey but, she eventually relented, agreeing to the part.

1 The Boondocks: Executive Producer Voiced Thugnificent Thugnificent was Riley Freeman's idol, a man who perpetued everything he thought he was destined to be. While Riley's grandfather believed the rapper, who had just moved into the neighborhood, was with his loud parties and bad influence over his grandson, Ben. What many fans may not be aware of is that the thugs are voiced not by a rapper but by the show's executive producer, Carl Jones. Jones is also the voice of another prominent Bundock character named Booty Warrior. He also produced 35 episodes while lending his vocal talents to the show.

The following is a partial list of characters who have appeared in the animated television series, The Boondocks. The protagonies of the Freeman family are portrayed in the Bondoquez series as an all-male, African-American trio, each of whom has very different characters. The main hero and narrator is Huy, who has the cognitive functions of a child genius. His brother Riley Freeman is more practical, streetier and more outspoken. Brothers rarely get along, except for example in the guess-ho episode comes to dinner, where Hoy and Riley work together to understand the truth of the character, Crystal. In most cases Hoy and Riley behave like polar anads, and many stories revolve around their sense of embarrassment over other acts. The third member of Freeman's family is Robert, Grandad to Hoy and Riley. Robert can't remember his age, yet he never deals with women of his generation. Huy Freeman hoy Freeman (voiced by Regina King) is a young, leftist, radical black revolutionary and retired domestic terrorist. He is a close master of the Chinese martial arts practitioner, as seen in the let's nab-opera episodes, the attack of kung fu killer Wolf, Stinky 3: Disgusting, and... Or death quest. He maintains an austere yet strangely loving relationship with his brother Riley, and occasionally gets out of his way to prevent his brother from giving up bad influences (giving some hard love). During the course of comic strips and TV series, Hoy constantly maintains a sobering behavior. In most episodes, Hui is a narrator and is often only through his narrative that reveals his thoughts and feelings. In comic strip, it's Michael Caesar's best friend who effectively confronts his character and excitant temperament with the pessimistic landscape of Hui's world. In the TV series, the role is played by Yazmin Dubois, Hui's neighbor, who balances Hoy's character with his childish and naïve innocence and often makes Hoy forced The situation that is exploited Huey can also speak the perfect Mandarin Chinese that is shown on the big red ball, though how he knows this is never explained. Riley Freeman (voiced by Regina King) is Huey's younger brother. Riley can be misled as a representative of black youth, and a product of mass media influence, in which he refers to women as bitches or hoes, often referento to his rep and his status on the streets, and idols gangesta rappers and their lifestyles. He often refers to himself with the self-appointed nickname Reezzy Young. Though he doesn't seem to be his brother's everything, Riley demonstrates his ability to rationally and plan, such as when he left attorney Tom DuBois speechless after arguing with him at R. Kelly's trial. Riley's criminal talent is revealed when he goes to crime with the incompetence of Ed Wuncler III and Gin Rummy in the let's nab opra episode. Riley is fascinated by firearms, displaying a tendency to violence. At Christmas, he declared himself a Santa Stocker and attacked Santa at a local shopping mall with airsoft Glock 17s and hit many innocent bystanders. Although Riley does not own any real firearms, he is linked to Ade Wonkler III and Jane Rami, who on occasion allowed him access to real weapons. Riley also seems to have an unusual amount of strength and stamina, as can be seen when he fights his brother Hoy, a skilled martial artist and swordsman, and when he fights kung fu-trained Stammener. Behind his defiant man's facade, Riley shows some sensitivities, as was the case in Riley's episode, during which he learns to use his creative abilities for creating art, rather than personal glory. Robert Freeman is The Grandfather of Freeman (voiced by John Witherspoon), a retired peddal grandfather and legal guardian of Hoy and Riley, who lives in the peaceful suburb of Woodcrest. Although it is never directly explained how Robert came as Hui and Riley's caretaker, it can implicitly be said that Huey and Riley's biological parents have died. Robert has witnessed many of the great events in American history and occasionally acts as a more pragmatic voice of reason in the Freeman family. Robert was a fighter pilot in World War II, where he flew a P-51 Mustang with Tuskgi airborne. He played a role in the civil rights movement but was prone to some faux pas, such as donning raincoats used in preparation for getting used by police firehose. He was also part of the Montgomery bus boycott, even sitting next to Rosa Parks and refusing to give up her seat first, though to Chagarin herself, she received all the credit. Although she expresses embarrassment at Huey and Riley's behavior, her initial motivation is to advance her family's best interest, which often lead her to conflict with her grandchildren. Hoy and Riley, though they have contrasting personalities, tend not to act in line with their grandfather's will Simple live. Riley gets in a lot of trouble, and Huey always has an eye for a bigger picture. When Robert thinks it is necessary, often against Riley, he does not use corporal punishment and has developed a high level of skill in using his belt for this purpose. The secondary characters of the DuBois family are Thomas Lancaster DuBois (voiced by Cedric Yarbrough) - Tom DuBois is a lawyer who lives across the street from freemans. He is an African-American, his character stereotyped of a successful white-collar middle-class black man. Easily terrified, Tom strictly adheres to the law, though Hoy points out that Tom's job as a prosecutor sends other black men to a fate he fears most. His character can be interpreted as an Uncle Tom because he is seen turning his back on his black heritage (yet his genealogy experiment shows him 32.5% Scottish) to marry a white woman (Sarah), producing a mixed-race child (Yazmin), and becoming a prosecutor who often condemns blacks. In line with the complexity of the show, the name Dubois may be a tribute to W.A. B is two boa and thus put his character in a state of conflict. For example, in one episode of The Neighborhood Clock, he was persuaded to speak to police for the freeman's guilt in a string of local escapes, and Tom confronted the neighborhood clock instead of familiarizing himself with the ridiculous nature of their charges. Tom was at one point an unwanted ship for Stinkmeaner after Stinkmeaner escaped from hell; however, Sinkmeyer was eventually snuck in to get Tom back to normal. Various episodes portray Tom as a supporter of LGBT rights, gun control (or at least proper gun registration), and intellectual property protection. Sarah Dubois (voiced by Jill Tully) – Sarah Dubois is Tom's white wife. He is comfortable about his interracial marriage even when Tom is ridiculed for it, as in R. Kelly's trial. He even jokingly tells Tom, I told you about mesin with those white women. Sarah and her daughter are Osher fans who make Tom jealous. Several episodes show Sarah being sexually frustrated when Tom's jealousy of flirting with Osher at their anniversary dinner, Sarah selfishly and mercilessly kicked her out of their home. Yazmin Dubois (voiced by Gaby Soleil for the first 3 seasons, Kiara Polas for Season 4) - Jasmine Dubois is Tom and Sarah's interracial daughter. He can be extremely paranoid and a little naïve, he has an object of ridicule for Riley. Jasmine was shocked by both of the 9/11 attacks (resulting in comic strip hiding in her room for two years) and realized that the tooth fairy was not real. He is a strong believer in Santa Claus, viewing him as the true meaning of Christmas to the point where he dreams of preaching the Gospel of Santa to the masses. Yazmin is likely to have an unsyming interest in Hoy since he follows her around, though he can sometimes be cool towards him. The Trial of R. Kelly first appears. Other main characters are Uncle Rokos (voiced by Gary Anthony Williams) - Uncle Rokos is the original antagonist of the series. Presumably a teenager, overweight, with a strange appearance and glassy eyes, Uncle Rokos idols black slave culture, and views of blacks align with white racist views. He hates himself, makes himself as out of his African-American heritage as much as he can, and is biased against all non-white people. [1] His greatest ambition is that blacks were still being slavery because he believes they were better than. His name draws on uncle Remus's character, the legendary raccoonor, from African-American folklore stories such as the Song of the South. He claims to be white because of a condition called vitiligo again. (That's the opposite of what Michael Jackson has, lucky bastard.) Uncle Rokos appears to be white, as shown in the Red Ball, where he claims that Ed Wonkler's white-headed lead helped the team win the game, and he refers to a Chinese man as a yellow. Ironically, he is the darkest character in the show. His character is a hyperbolic parody hating his black man. However, as much as he may hate black culture, other episodes show him socializing with freemans. In... Or death trying, he shows dominance over nunchaku and fighting hand-to-hand. At the Uncle Ruckus Reality Show, he is horrified to learn via a DNA test that he is 102% African with a 2% margin of error. The knowledge of his true legacy makes him quit all his careers and adopt other behaviors that match his racist views. Later in the episode, false documents are shown to him stating that he is 50.07% white after executives in charge of the show are upset by the drop in ratings that Rokos' behavior has caused. He is told that the original results were carried out by a black intern and were wrong. In colorful fanfare, the likely cause of his hatred for blacks is revealed. As a child, he was repeatedly abused by his drunken father, Mr. Rokos, and was re-grew up believing the history of Vitiligo and his white man by his loving mother Bonnie Rokos. Although the gentleman later declared that he was truly a random birth and that his skin condition was a delicious trick, Rokos still maintained the belief that he was adopted and was originally white. In good times, Uncle Rokos begins his campaign to run for mayor. Edward Ed Rothschild Wuncler Sr. (voiced by Edward Asner) - Ed Wuncler Sr. is an overweight, rich realtor, whose father Ed Wuncler Jr. and grandfather Ed Wuncler iii. His family founded woodcrest and have lived in the area for more than a century. His last name draws on The One-Time Lur character from Dr. Seuss Lorax's book. Like his name, Wonkler acts as an old-age tycoon who has the freedom to exploit cheap labor and avoid high taxes on The It's hot. The wealthy Wonclair owns a grandfather's home loan, like any house in Woodcrest, and manipulates the Woodcrest police force. Wankler sometimes behaves in a racist way, such as calling Grandad Robert Friedman and only using illegal Mexicans in his restaurants, but his racism implicitly served as a byproduct of his insatiable greed than active hatred of those of different races. It seems that Ed has a general fenchour for Robert, referencing him as old school, and even funding his soul food investment restaurant in the Itis episode, though this may have been part of an elaborate plan to reduce the value of property in the area so that he could buy the park nearby. He also owns a fast food restaurant called McWuncler, Parodi from McDonald's as seen in the return episode of The King, and a sweatshop that is run by 12-year-old Indonesian girls as on the hot block. In season 3 of the finale, this is Goin' Down, Wonkler masterminding a false terrorist attack in Woodcrest, with the intention of making the lone victim (an overweight security guard) a national martyr and cultural icon, and then exploiting his likeness for profit including a film that stars Jack Black. The plot is foiled by Hoy and a government agent, Jack Flowers, but Winkler avoids arrest thanks to the involvement of President Barack Obama. In the final minutes of the episode, an angry flower takes Wunkler's granddaughter hostage, and Winkler responds with a smile and says, What are you waiting for? Shoot him! Edward Eddie Wuncler Jr. (voiced by Sam McMurray) - Ed Wuncler Jr. son of Ed Wuncler Sr., immoral like his father with the apparent code of behavior similar to the mafia as he is not above committing acts of violence. Wonkler Jr. appears for the first time in Season 4 to seemingly help Robert in trouble with his money in good times, only to have the Freeman family in even worse condition and owe him money. Not long after, Wonkler Jr. is indebted to the Freemans and others who work as slaves at their LibertyLand amusement park, until Huey sees the riots on the way and the amusement park closes very soon. Edwin Ed Wuncler III (voiced by Charlie Murphy) - Ed Wuncler III is the grandson of Ed Wuncler Sr. And Ed Wuncler Jr.'s son Ed Wuncler III has been discharged drunk, mentally, trigger-happy former Special Forces fresh soldier from active duty in Iraq. His character can be seen as a mockery of a young George W. Bush - a figure destined to be president about the power of his family's wealth and power, despite his sub-average intelligence (as noted at the end of the Garden Party, where his grandfather says, in 30 years, that son will become president of the United States... And he's still a fucking idiot!). He reveals that while he was in Iraq, he repeatedly defecated in his pants for fear that Bo endangered his unit's position and was therefore not allowed to patrol. Bling Ed includes big in the shape of the letter W, and he often wears a bulletproof vest. Although he is supposed to inherit a great fortune, he insists that the life of the poorly executed felony, usually on behalf of his grandfather's business interests or as self-interest, will live up to Riley

Freeman. Because of his willingness to kill, Ed is a borderline sociopath and frequently displays recklessness, arrogance and lack of fines, which usually leads to the failure of both his intended target and others. He seems to have difficulty identifying the targets, as he repeatedly kidnapping or attempting to murder the wrong person. Ed III and his friend Jane Rami move away with their insincerable criminal antiques because Ed Wonkler has the head of the police and city administration on his salary, and because his status as a member of the U.S. Armed Forces confiscates the public image of a hero, while Jane Rami often argues that their escapes stem from being her master planner. E.D. and Rami are seen as heroes when they robbed a convenience store belonging to a person of terrorist descent after unexpectedly looking shots and in an attempt to kidnap Operra Winfrey, they mistakenly kidnapped Maya Angelo, then Bill Keung instead. Ed's signature line is, are you all looking at it? Jane Rami (voiced by Samuel L. Jackson) – Jane Rami is a former Special Forces soldier and best friend of Ed Wuncler III, who will appear for the first time in episode one of a date with the health inspector. The character is apparently regarded as parodi from Donald Rumsfeld with similarities in name, appearance and use of real quotes. Although it is shown that he is smarter than his best friend, you share similar adamic tendencies. His name is also a reference to Gin Rami's card game. When someone challenges his poor criminal planning and claims to run away only because no one is coming after them, he defends himself by claiming that lack of evidence is not evidence of absence (mocking Bush and Rumsfeld's claims about Saddam Hussein's assumed weapons of mass destruction in Iraq) and insisting he cannot plan for unknown unknowns. He complains in every part of modern technology, from Bluetooth headsets to iPhones, and drives a black Cadillac. Scalade in many ways. Jane Rami sees herself as a patriot and will do whatever it takes to bring fugitives of justice for her own reason, a behavior that mirrors American militias. His speaking style often ridicules Samuel L. Jackson's character Jules Winfield from Pulp Fiction. Otis Jenkins (voiced by serial producer Carl Jones) – Otis Jenkins is a one-time rapper known as thugs and Idol Riley. Hails of thugs from the fictional town of Terra-Bell, Georgia. He is a loud-mouthed, effusion-puff sport similar to those worn by rapper Ludacris, and lives in a white and gold mansion. He reveals his narcissism by sculptures of himself designed to mirror Greek gods, as well as with a painting depicting himself standing above Luther King Jr., Malcolm X, Tupac Shakur, and the infamous B.I.J. Not long after he moves into the neighborhood, he begins competing with Robert and later begins Riley to those around him called the Deadly Intersection Crew. Despite the less-than-attractive traits, the thug tries to be a good neighbor by asking permission to throw loud parties and encouraging face-to-face communication inside the neighborhood. In the fried chicken flu episode he can even be seen rescuing the family from Uncle Rokos and Ms. von Hewson. In Bitches To Rags, it is revealed that the thugs have a bachelor's degree in communications, and that his record sales and popularity have been declining sharply; Otis then begins a new job as the delivery man from touching his stage name. Leonard (voiced by Drai Davis) is a pale yet well-meaning friend of thugs and a crew member of the deadly intersection. Although he is treated as second class because of social awkwardness, he is the only crew member who sticks with thugs when he loses money. While he is shown to be slow and a bit buffoon, he is also shown to be more thoughtful, generous and loyal than most of the show's characters. In season three, she is almost always shown in her Wendy's dress, a job she took over after the deadly intersection crew was disbanded. The representations and parodies of the real people of Martin Luther King Jr. (voiced by Kevin Michael Richardson) - In episode 1 of The King's Return, Hoy imagines that Martin Luther King Jr. survived his 1968 attack, but fell into a 32-year coma. When King regains consciousness in 20 years, he realizes that society is nothing like his imagination. Svey Calvoy (voiced) - It's the MTV News reporter who first appears in gangstalcious documentary Gangstalcious: Resurrection and then Breaking News. He also appears in the story of thugs, who recount the documentary Thugs: The Donkey to the Bitches, and reports on the theft of the Riley chain in Shin. Bill Keung (voiced by Kevin Michael Richardson) – Bill Keung played as a barely understandable pessimist who complained endlessly about the poor customs of young people. Ed and Rami kidnapped him in Let's Nab-e-Oppera, but almost immediately returned him while they found him too annoying. Quincy Jones (with her own voice) - At a Christmas Huey Freeman, huey hires Jones as music director for the school's Christmas play, which has been given perfect creative control to write and stage it as appropriate. After Hoy dismisses all the children cast in the play, he and Jones discuss the idea of bringing high-profile movie stars to fill roles. Xzibit (Voice by Herself) – Xzibit Car Dealers Freemans, Dorothy, thus one of Riley's tricks, and makes a brief appearance in the second season when the grandfather asks him to help A rapper dys. Ghostface Killah (with her own voice) – Ghostface Killah appears to be Huey as a ghost (despite not actually being dead) and advising her when Tom Dubois is possessed by the stinkmeaner spirit. Lamyhton Taeston (voiced by Bob J. Thompson) – Lamyhton Taeston is based on Latherian Milton, an 8-year-old who stole his grandmother's car and left for Joey Rid. Lamilton is Riley's friend, though he soon realizes that Lamilton's intentions are malicious. Like his real-life counterpart, Lamilton steals his grandmother's car, then goes with Riley to an joierid and persuades him to behave improperly. Believing Lamyhton was dangerous, his former therapist shoots and reports him to the police. Lamilton's attempts to rob Ms. Van Hausen's home lead to the killing of a dog at which point she is arrested. After Lamilton comes out, he hunts Riley and tries to kill him on the suspicion that Riley is the one who told him. After the fight then falls off the roof and survives but is then attacked by the therapist. Booty Warrior – Booty Warrior is a gay prison prisoner who is a caricature of real-life convicted serial rapist Johnson's fleece in appearance, voice, and character. On a date with the booty warrior, it is revealed that the booty warrior was convicted of raping Chris Hansen. During a chaperoned program by Tom DuBois in which troubled school children are sent to prison to learn what's happening there, booty warrior develops lust for Tom, holds him hostage, and riot follows. The warrior chases Tom's booty in an attempt to rape him, but fails when he steps on the wet soap. Winston Jerome – Winston Jerome is a superstar playwright, screenwriter, actor and cult leader. He appears in the pause episode in which it is revealed winston has established his theatrical cult in order to have sex with men. His character, and more specifically his success as an actor and screenwriter, is a spores of Tyler Perry. Joe Blanket (voiced by Fred Willard) - Joe Blanket is a riley school teacher who in a state of confusion called him a and caused a fuss. Blanket gets confused because he assumed that saying was different from. He argues that Riley said the word first, saying it so frequently that he didn't even notice. The blanket is based on real-life teacher Paul Dawson, who called The Knowledge of Education's Kayshan Chavers during the confrontation in class. George W. Bush - 43rd President of the United States. Barack H. Obama – 44th President of the United States. Ronald Reagan — 40th President of the United States Vedgy Rodlin (voiced by Donald Faison) – Vedgy Rodlin is head of entertainment for BET, simulating yes-man to his superiors. The character is an apparent mockery of bet entertainment's former chairman and executive producer for the Boondocks, Reginald Hadlin. Kardashian Kardashian (voiced by Gary Delice) - Cardacia is a parody of the Kardashian sisters from the football club, Kim, and the football club. Like them, he's a The TV star with butt implants, which explodes during a date with Robert. He dies alone and the pilot has never pitched for his reality show. Siri (also with the voice of Gary Delice) – a program that grandpa connects to and the main antagonist of Siri's dream. When Robert says he loves him, Siri becomes obsessed. Challenged by Huey at one point he quickly appears to him on Wikipedia and notes he is a domestic terrorist. He hacks Robert's new Android and, at the wedding, sends fake images to al-Qaeda's Robert, who is a terrorist. A drone comes to Freeman's house and destroys Siri. Repetitive white shadow characters (with the voice of John C. McGinley) - White Shadow is a white, secret agent with white hair and shadows that its responsibility is to spy on Hoy for his radical actions. A mystery person who claims to be sent by overt powers to spy on Hoy from monitoring his communications to personal conversations. It doesn't prove whether he's a real agent or simply a fig of imagination because of his rising paranoia; due to the fact that he appears and disappears easily and no other yet see him. Though he seems ominous as a person, he usually seems to offer insight or warning. Hoy is the one who dubs him a white shadow. Gangstalcious is one of Riley's favorite rappers. Gangsta features appear in Gangstaus Story 2, Gangster Story 2, and Thank You For Not An Informant, and in this is a black president, Huy Freeman. She is in charge of Hit Thuggin' Luv's single heard on the show (which is heard in many episodes), as well as Homies Over Hoes. Inspired by TheIless Job as a child, he acted like a murderer so that people would love him. This behavior was carried out into his adult life, and he has since lied. He is a closet homosexual and goes to great lengths to keep this secret out of the public. He was previously involved in a secret homosexual adventure with a gangster named Lincoln who attempted to kill Gangstaus for betraying their love while on tour, attacking a record label performer at some point, and at the TRL only to arrest him later. She was also involved in an affair with a hip-hop video Wicksan named Jessica Altberg, who later wrote a book revealing she was gay (despite the fact that there were already countless obvious clues to the fact). his real name is frederick . Mactastic (voiced by Snoop Dogg) – Maktastic is a rapper and crew member of the deadly intersection of thugs. Despite Gangesta's stereotypical attitude, it is shown that he is perfectly stated in his speech at times (a bit like the actor of his voice), and is a multi-word man. His appearance resembles the taboo of black-eyed peas. After falling from a deadly intersection, Thugnificent points out that Mack is back to pimpin'. Flunotital (with sound) Rhyme) – Drake Cornish is a rapper named Flunominal and a crew member of the deadly intersection of thugs. His vocabulary seems quite limited, and in the end, even among his sentences, he frequently uses hip-hop slang, and if he can't think of anything else to say, he'll say things like word! and doesn't make sense? (Phrases commonly used by rapper Ghostface Killah of the Wu-Tang clan, which plays a role in Stinkmeaner Strikes Back). Although he's a tough-nosed man, gangsta façade and as loud as thugs at times, he's shown to be soft and sensitive, as seen when his mother called him and blamed him on the controversy, causing deadly intersection tags and ongoing attacks on the elderly by mob competition with Robert Freeman (grandfather), and when his Magnus Milosevic butchered. He hit him in the leg with a baseball bat after we tried to get Riley's chain back, he resigns from the deadly intersection of assholes to the donkey when the thugs are unable to pay for the house and when the thugs fire him from a job as an office worker. A pimp named Slickback (voiced by Kat Williams) - a pimp named Slickback Pimp is easily irritated when someone called him Slickback for short, calling to be addressed by his full professional name: it's like a tribal called quest' - you say everything. He first appeared at Guess Ho to dinner when grandfather started dating him, Crystal. He made a cameo appearance on the king's return but had no line of talk. She appears in season 2 of Tom, Sarah and Osher, in an episode where Tom believes Sarah is having an affair with singer Osher, trying to teach Tom to gain the respect of his wife through violence and intimidation. This character is modeled from Kath Williams' character from Mike's Money on the next Friday. She also drives a BMW purple that matches her purple suit. He also appears in The Gangster Story Part 2, in which he is brought in by grandfather to talk to Riley about sex and disband him from homosexuality. Colonel H. Stynkemimer (voiced by Cedric Yerbrow) is a blind black old man who looks like Dr. Badumibe of C.O.P.S. As Hoy put it, Sinkmianer has acted like an ornery old man all his life and saw his cancer-induced blindness at the age of 15, since he hated everything and everyone he saw. Though expected to die within three years, doctors believed stinkmeaner's love-hate kept him alive as he dedicated the rest of his life to making life all hell live. After overcoming Robert in a fight in the shopping mall parking lot, Hoy confuses Stingmianer with a blind swordsman (specifically Zatvich) and has his grandfather's train to fight The Cummings. But by the time Hoy realized stinkmeaner is a regular old man, having raced legally sanctioned before at the last second to ensure no prosecution, the fight against Robert unwittingly killed ended Ending hell soon after, Stinkmeaner trains in the martial arts before the events stinkmeaner strikes back where the devil sends him to earth to spread ignorance and chaos among blacks. Once on earth, Stinkmeaner has Tom Dubois to avenge Robert before being fooled by Huey to find common ground with Uncle Ruckus. In Season 3 of Stinkmeaner III: The Hateocracy, which serves as its narrator, it is revealed that it belonged to a crew of violent and elderly hoods known as hatefulness. When informed of Stinkmeaner's death, surviving members of The Holocaust, three skilled martial artists, Lord Rufus Krabmeier, Lady Asmerda Gripnasty and Mr George Pistaferson, will reunite to attack the Freeman family because it gave them an excuse to ruin someone's life. Fortunately, while Kramer murdered Bushido Brown during the attack, Mitochrasy is briefly arrested by police. In season 4 of Stinkmeaner's Episode: The Beginning of clone war, it shows stinkmeaner enrolling in a simulation project before his death and left instructions for his clone, which is genetically enhanced, to continue Robert's hostility. Finally, after Robert recently descended to his level, the Stenkeminer clone would stop revenge but still harass the Freeman family, [2] The Rev. Rolo Goodlove (voiced by CeeLo Green) - The Rev. Rolo Goodlove left African American active and a media owner who seems more likely to give him media exposure than to show his opinion on the subject. He originally appeared in the Bundox episode of Word S, as a supporter of the Freemans after Mr. Blanket used a racial slime in Riley. He then turned it into a political debate between himself and Ann Coulter (carefully tuned) and gave him more media exposure. His protest was overshadowed by (forcibly with a gun) protest by elderly women for the right to own a gun. The grandfather was sure he would receive a lot of money for the incident. He also helped Hoy on hunger strike in an attempt to pull BET out of the air, but Rollo was offered a televised sitcom on BET, leading him to no longer help Hoy strike. His character is loosely based on the rev Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson. Cynthia Cindy/C. Murderer/Coward McPharon (voiced by Tara Strong) – Cynthia is the girl who originally appeared as a recurring character in comic strip as a girl in Hui's class who is unaware of racial issues. He enjoys rap music, especially Snoop Dogg. In the TV series, he appears as a highly talented junior basketball player for his team, well (yet too blown) at AAVE, and matches Riley in cockiness. Riley soon resorts to insulting his mother and the difficulties associated with her in Cindy's life to get her out of her game, leading her to cry and run off the court. She's in Ballin' and The Story of Gangstalcious Part 2, in Season 2 and in Season 3 The red ball episode is hoy as part of the kickball team, although he does not speak. She has a bigger role in season 3 of fundraising as one of Riley's partners in her chocolate company, His visual appearance, especially his hairstyle, is based on Kami's video game character from the Street Fighter series. Bushido Brown (voiced by Cedric Yarbrough in the first appearance, Michael Jai White in the second appearance) – Bushido Brown is a kung-fu bodyguard hired by Oprah. For a while in the show, he is the best martial artist, whose skills largely outsehd Huy Freeman. He appeared in season one of Let's Nab Oppera and season two episodes of The Kung Fu Killer Attack of the Bitch Wolf. He was killed in season three of Stinkmeaner 3: The Hateocracy after being beheaded in a fight with three elderly combative Hateocracy (who were in contact with Colonel H. Stinkummer) when they were out to kill Robert using a flying guillotine at the time that he was protecting them. Before he dies, he is shown to be a proud bitch who overcharged his customers for his services. After Bushidow Brown's death, members of The Hateochrasy are arrested by police for the murder of Bushidow Brown. Bushido Brown's character is heavily influenced by Black Belt Jones' character black belt Jones and William from Enter the Dragon (both played by martial artist Jim Kelly) as well as his character Michael Jay White Parody's black dynamite from the film Black Dynamite. [Citation required] Ms. Van Huzen (voiced by Marion Ross) - Ms. Van Hozen is an elderly right-wing woman who heads the local neighborhood clock, and sisters of the Second Amendment. When Ed 3rd and Jane Rummy are engaging in their local crime, she tries military neighborhood hours after the Freemans. During the fried chicken flu, he organizes another militia to try and take freeman supplies. Deborah Le Weil (voiced by Debra Wilson) – Deborah Le Weil, who is the fictional head of BET (Black Evil TV). Deborah Lowell is an evil psychotic woman dedicated to the network's goal: the destruction of blacks. He has been shown to murder his employees when they do not meet his good standards. As he says, It's not enough that the shows are bad. They must be evil, too! She is best portrayed as a female version of Dr. Ewell from the Austin Powers film series. Her name may also be a reference to Cruella De Vil. Cristal (voiced by Tiffany Thomas) - Cristal is a provocative young woman to follow. He was briefly placed with Robert Freeman, who was not known, and quickly became a nuisance to the boys, which was obvious to them. While he identified himself as working on the sale he has been confirmed to have one under the view of a pimp named Slickback. References ^ The Boondocks: Exclusive Character Profile – Uncle Ruckus.
